SUNDAY MORNING ALARM.-While making his rounds, about three o'clock Sunday morning, private watchman Mereness discovered a small blaze in the rear of Grave's grocery. He immediately gave the fire alarm, but the rear door of the establishment was forced open and the fire extinguished without aid from the engine. The fire origifrom lighted cigar stumps, thrown and hope it will be as cordially received there it is thought by two young men who had been standing near the stove just before the grocery had been closed Saturday night. The loss was small, the lesson it suggests being worth much more than it costs.

THE INDIA WORKERS.-A unique and profitable entertainment was given in the basement of the Presbyterian church, Monday evening, by the India Workers' a mission band of boys. The several countries to which missionary interest is at present directed were represented by boys in costume, who presented the needs of their people. Interest in the missionary countries was also enhanced by a miniature display of the idols and objects of each. The net proceeds of the entertainment amounted to about $25.00. To Miss Fannie L. Hall is due the credit of arranging the bazar and of doing the greater part of the literary labor connected with its splendid presentation.

GHOSTS IN THE COURT HOUSE.—The Ann Arbor Democrat discloses the awful fact that the Court House is haunted, and gives the particulars of the ghostly occupancy in a column in its last issue. "Pale sickly lights," fingers," and the usual concomitants of standard stories of the kind, form a part of this one, said to have been mistable evidence of reportorial inflasame page in which the ghosts are dolite, and that sort of folderol. referred to, and its invitation to "give it a trial and be convinced." that held under the auspices of the young men of the city, at the Opera House Thursday evening of next week. THE YPSILANTIAN is published each Thursday afternoon, from the office, south side of Congress street.

March 24 Five-minute speeches will be made by fifteen or more young men. The meeting will not begin until ten minutes past eight, in order that persons attending the prayer meeting may also attend the young men's meeting. Admission free, no collection.

A PARAGRAPH FOR PARENTS -It is sincerely hoped that the parents of the many boys who are in the habit of loitering around the freight houses and depot and catching on the freight trains will take warning by the awful accident that has deprived Louis Hochstadt of his arm and leg, and perhaps of his life, and put an immediate stop to such dangerous pastime. It is not enough to believe that your boy does not go near the depot or trains when he should be at school or at home, you should know that he does not, if it be possible to obtain such knowledge.

THE AMENDMENT CAMPAIGN .-Much interest is being manifested in the prohibition amendment in this city and vicinity, and meetings and discussions are being held in some of the neighboring churches and school houses almost every night, in addition to the mass meetings at the Opera cital will be given in High School hall House, by the friends of the amendthis evening, by the pupils of Miss ment. The Detroit Evening Journal edits the following editorial:

The enthusiastic desire of the president and professors of the Michigan normal school to add classical studies to its course. But the state has no need of them. Classics are taught to some extent at the Agricul tural college; they are taught at the university. Michigan is doing enough for Greek and Latin. WAR IS A BAD THING. The Mother Who Patiently Waited For Her Boys Who Never Came.

"People talk about war with Mexico and war with England, and the newspapers print pleasant incidents and glorious achievements of the noble soldiers who figured in the late War, which is all well and as it should be, but," said old man Plunket, looking over his spectacles, "thar's none of 'em what knows what war is lessen they's

"I tell you, sti ger," said the old man, "you may read and you may look at pictures of batti and you may go to all these 'campments and see them have their sham fights, but you won't know a bit more about what real war is than a man who would suppose your Gate City Guard could thrash old England. War is a bad thing, mister, war's a bad thing, sure!"

"Do you see that house up the road?" asked the old man, pointing with his finger. "Well, stranger, right by that window than by the chimney is a vacant chair. Not mor'n a week ago, the dear old woman who sot in that chair, right by that window, with her eyes looking right down this big road ever since Lee's surrender, was buried over yonder at the church, and thar's not a man nor a woman in this settlement but what has shed a tear over the grave whar she lies."

The old man wiped his spectacles with his red bandana, and with his head bent and his eyes cast down shook his head and uttered, "War's a bad thing, stranger; war's a bad thing."

"That old lady," continued the old man, "had four as fine boys as ever shouldered a musket for the Confederacy—and that's saying a right smart. They all went to Virginia, and one by one they were killed till there was only Tom, he was the oldest, and I shall never forget when the news come that he was killed at Seven Pines. Squire Adams he lived cross on the other road yonder, and the mail for the settlement went to his house during the War, and the neighbors would get their letters from thar. We'd done hered thar'd been a big fight at Richmond, so I was settin' right here in this piazer smoking after supper, and I hered Jim. one of Squire Adams' niggers, start from the Squire's house down the path that led across the fields to von house. hollowing and blowing his quills, and I told my old 'oman thar was a letter for our neighbors. Jim he went down the and creaking. The windows rattled path, and directly he crossed over the branch yonder, and the sound from his quills came up the branch, and I could hear the doleful tune he was blowing as mosphere was to gather more closely if I'd been in 200 yards of him. I followed the sound of his quills till he struck the path through you pine thicket, and then he quit blowing his quills our antique surroundings. There was and sung:

"Down in the cornfield,
Hear dat mournful sound,
All de darkies am er weeping,
For massa's in de cold, cold ground.
"I told my old 'oman I was afered that nigger had bad news for our neighbors, and so it was, for no sooner than he'd got to the house, I hered screams and hollerin, and me and the old 'oman put over thar, and what I seed then makes me know war's a bad thing, mister, war's a bad thing.'

THE OLD ABBEY'S LEGEND.

The Tower Bell at Midnight.

Journeying through Warwickshire, England, we found shelter by accident in an old abbey, a somber pile that had been built in the reign of Henry I, as a hospital for the Knights of St. John, and afterwards became an abbey or monastery. In the reign of Elizabeth the destroyed portions were rebuilt and the relic thus restored had been retained in the family of the Earl of Warwick for three centuries. Every room was eloquent of the long past Antique furniture, mullioned windows. wainscotings in oak, beds heavily curtained, and great dark rafters produced and continued the general somber and ghostly effect.

As night came on the sun sank below the horizon in a chaos of clouds, which seemed to rise up and drown its light, and through which glowed a stain of angry red. The wind rose suddenly and set the Gothic gables and chimneys shivering and innumerable phantom ghosts were conjured up from the semi-gloom. Our only relief from the ghostly ataround the broad fire-place piled with logs, which sent up cheery showers of yellow light and put into wide contrast certainly a mystery connected with this old monastic pile of buildings.

Our drawing-room was labeled 'St. Mary Magdalen," and our sleeping apartments "St. Claudes" and "St. Agatha." — heirlooms Agatha," — heirlooms doubtless from the old abbey. But it was not merely a breath from the remote past which gave us a hint of hidden secrets—it was a haunting memory of human tragedy which itself in the dead of night in mournful whisperings and anguished sobs, and gentle tappings against the solid masonry, ending at last in the long vibrations of a solemn-tolling bell and the chanting of some Franciscan brother. We heard it all the first night we slept in our St. Agatha bedroom. "Who rings the tower bell at midnight?" we enquired of our little maid the next day. She nearly dropped the tray on which she was bringing our coffee, in the sudden surprise of the question. "You heard—the bell?" she faltered rather than asked.

"Yes." replied one of our party,-

"and who chants the miserere in such a silver voice after the tolling is over?" The brown-haired waiting-maid was evidently oppressed by our questioning. She turned a shade paler as she hesitatingly replied, "They say-it isbrother Cecil, the good monk," and then hastily retreated from the room. After that her lips were sealed. In vain we tried to get the story from some inmate of the manor-house. Everbody was astonishingly innocent of all knowledge of that kind. Nobody ever knew of any particular history connected with the building. But at last our opportunity came. At last we discovered our garrulous antiquarian. The big book which he kept for registering visitors showed the names of some of our distinguished countrymen. General Grant, Mark Twain, Hawthorne, and the Bancroft "Well," resumed the old man, "the family, had all written their autographs in the antiquarian's volume. From him we learned the mournful when the abbot and abbess had each com manded special prayers among the assembled monks and nuns. chants and prayers ascended, mixed with the rolling organ music, but it could not keep out another sound of mysterious import—the sound of hurrying feet in the entrance halls, and the deposit of the castle plunder within the abbey for safe keeping. A whisper went around that a noble captive was a prisoner of the abbey.

-nor indeed were any asked. One day Brother Cecil-whose voice rose in the chants like a silver-toned flute—was passing the corridor when the fair captive's cell door was momentarily opened. What a vision greet. ed his wondering eyes! Cloths of gold hung from the walls in rich profusion; mottled skins strewed the floor. But the fairest object of all was Margery herself, standing in the midst of this barbaric splendor, with pale and resolute face and a heroic light shining from her beautiful eyes. Brother Cecil thought in his heart that such face with a nimbus painted around the brow might well be framed as the pictured face of a saint. A strange thrill of sympathy went out from his soul to the captive on the other side of the wall as he thought of the rare vision, and when to his ears one day there came a faint That last great day when the records tell, sound of tapping against the solid masonry which thenceforward continued intermittently—but most assiduously of all during chapel or refectory hours, where there was noise of chants to drown it—he was impelled by a strange temptation to help the fair prisoner by digging away his side of the wall.

> Yielding to the tempter, he went to the abbot one day with a confession. He was carving an image of the Virgin, he said,—a thank-offering; but thinking he might prove unworthy of the gracious task his heart had wellnigh failed him, and he therefore begged the holy father's approving blessing. From that time forward Brother Cecil worked steadily at the task of scraping away the division wall, impelled by an irresistible sympathy for the unknown captive. What was the mystery of that captivity? He did not know. He only knew that his "heart was worn with the beating of hands against a relentless barrier." hands whose weakness compelled his out stretched aid, as far as in him lay.

But the day came at length when no registering struggles for liberty recorded themselves upon the adamantine wall. Complete silence reigned. Brother Cecil was puzzled. Did the silence, auger good or ill? Whatever portent hovered in the atmosphere. when the hour of twilight came, the good monk sought the abbot's permission to stand guard as sentinel that night without the turreted walls. At starlight his voice rang out across the paved courtyard, intoning the hour with the watchwords, "All's well!" in long and measured cadence. At nine. at ten, at eleven, the silver-voiced call was repeated, as if no whisper of tragedy was near. Leaning against angle of the building, Cecil wondered what might be fate of the fair captive within its walls. Suddenly his eyes were directed upwards toward the ivy-covered tower. Was it the night-wind which moved the ivy so mysteriously, or some silent bird seeking its nest in the bell tower?

still air and then—then—surely that was a woman's form emerging from the clinging mass of vines!

The dark object was now directly underneath the bell.

Was it the captive maiden? Cecil's heart stood still in a horror of expectation. With wildly outstretched arms the figure caught the bell-rope. A single solemn tolling of the bell rang out upon the air of night. It was indeed a knell of death, for the next instant "Faire Margery" lay upon the pavement of the courtyard below, silent in that last passionless embrace of the pale bridegroom. Then came the sound of hurrying feet, followed by hushed exclamations of awe and lights glimmering from the abbey windows. From a kneeling figure on the courtyard pavement there arose, amid the subdued voices of the women, the beseeching burden of the miserere. It was Brother Cecil, on his knees, intoning the penitential chant. But its tones now were a wail, tremulous with heart-break and a sorrow that must henceforth be an unceasing corrosion in his breast. *

"Fair Margery" had simply made a choice of tragedies. This was the sad secret breathed by legions of shadows through the ruined abbey, and repeated from wall and turret and tower. This is why the bell tolls at dead of night and why the ghostly intoning of holy Cecil's voice rises in the miserere, borne by the sighing winds that seem to come up like a sob from those forgotten centuries .- M. A Texas Literary Venture.

In publishing this paper, remarks a Texas editor, we are working under disadvantage. Six subscribers and two copies sold of the last issue of this paper is not flattering to the editor. If an editor of a monthly or quarterly paper, even with a large circulation to begin with, would undertake to publish all original matter he would despair after the first six numbers. We have in stock an immense supply of arguments and explanations in support of our theories, but it would not be proper to publish them unless called upon. Nevertheless we intend to make good our promise to subscribers and publish twelve numbers of this paper with original matter—the acme of literature. according to our reasoning. Orr asked if the senator from Missouri insisted upon his point of order that he was no longer a senator, Benton's term expiring that day. Mr. Benton responded that he did.

"Then," cried Orr, "the sergeant-atams will remove the gentleman from the floor, as by his own confession he is not entitled to it."

The sally was greeted with laughter, and Mr. Benton responded that with the permission of the senator from South Carolina he would claim his privilege as an ex-member of the Senate and remain.

THE WRONG MAN. Whatever ill the conferences of Plowitz and Miss Beaufoy might bode towards us, I had at least the advantage of being able to observe without exciting observation. The first fruits of my vigilance were uneasy thoughts that Plowitz had indeed some inkling of my secret, and was resolved either to deteet my false pretences, or to frustrate the schemes to which they invited me to aspire. But I resolved, while exercising all the caution I could muster, to act for the interest of Mary Fortescue and myself, precisely as though no suspicion of the real state of affairs were aroused in any quarter. The advantage given to me by having surprised the secret of the staircase, I resolved to use as freely as was compatible with safety. My first care was to open up communications with Mary-to satisfy myself of her welfare, and to Everybody had gone out except myself—a state of affairs which I had hardly dared to hope would come about so soon. The house was profoundly still. I left the drawing-room door open, and played as loudly as I could several of the airs which Mary and I had sung or played most frequently together. Then, looking carefully about me that I might not be observed by any of the Hardy faction, I set the mechanism of the staircase in operation, and in a minute stood within the narrow passage-way.

Some instinct had warned Mary to be on the watch. Searcely had I advanced cautiously as far as the door of the room in which I had so roughly brought Plovitz's wooing to a close when Mary appeared at the end of the passage. She flew towards me when she made sure who it was.

"I knew you would come soon," she sure you meant it for me.

"Tney were the songs you like best. I scarcely dared to hope you would understand their message. She blushed, and then asked anxious-were here that day?' 'No; he seems to think it was you who in some way taught him a lesson. Have you not seen him since?"

"No. I do not fear him. I can avoid him as a rule if I hear him coming. Anyhow, I am not as much afraid of him for myself." "For whom then?"

"I am afraid for you," she said earnshyly at me, in strange contradiction to the earnestness of her speech. "I am afraid for you. He would nothe could not hurt me. But if he thought you were opposing him-still more, if he imagined you could see, he would stand at nothing for revengefor safety.

"He would be right," I answered. But you? How is it with you? Helpless and a prisoner as you virtually are, I tremble for your safety."

"No." she replied. "you exaggerate my danger. It is true that I am a prisoner, but I would be a prisoner of my own choice rather than be constantly in the society of Dr. Plowitz, who likes me too much, or of Guilia, who loves me too little."

A brief time of conversation, interesting only to ourselves followed, and then my concern for Mary's safety steeled me to a hurried parting. But as I went out on the landing, just as the wall closed behind me, I thought, most vividly, that I had seen a figurethe figure, as it seemed, of Hardystanding at the end of the passage. Had he been listening? Had he me? And, if so, how could I tell-how guard against the probable revenge of Plowitz?"

A few days passed, in which this doubt and the uncertainty as to what effect the occurence, if observed, might have had upon the treatment of Mary Fortescue, gave me but little rest day and night The Basilisk was almost at her best and sweetest. Plowitz was cordial enough in manner, but there was a look of green jealousy and hatred justified my worst suspicions. I could believe at times, from that look, that he had wreaked his envy and chagrin by even the death of her who had been unhappy enough to attract his unwelcome addresses. My anxiety was so great that I took the earliest opportunity when Plowitz had set out for a walk, towards twilight one afternoon, to assure myself of the continued welfare of Mary. I hastened to the staircase and pulled the lever. Scarcely had I set my foot within the passage when Mary, pale and anxious, came running towards me.

"Oh, go!" she cried; "you are in great danger!"
"How?" I asked. "Who knows I am

"Husn!" she whispered. "Plowitz knows all. Hardy is even now signalling him to return. He saw you last time, and Dr. Plowitz will stand at nothing. Hardy has been on the watch ever since, and when Dr. Plowitz goes out, it is on purpose that he may have a chance of catching you

"You would have no chance. This s a dreadful house. People have been killed here before now. Nothing is known of these things outside. Hardy is ordered, I know, to lock the machinery of the staircase if he finds yet here and then you cannot escape.

At this moment I heard a stealthy footstep upon the back stair and while I stepped back into the little morning room where Plowitz had interviewed Miss Fortescue with such unsatisfactory results, she herself rapidly reached her own room farther on, and I had the satisfaction of hearing the gentle click of the bolt that told me that she was in security.

The figure of a man, which in the dim light I read to be Hardy, came quietly along the passage; very slowly, as if fearful of making a noise. When he got nearly opposite the doorway in which I was standing, the gentle creak. ing of the staircase machinery made itself audible. The light from the hall shone for a moment into the dusk of the passage, and a figure which looked like that of Plowitz quickly entered. Hardy, from where he was crouching, had not enjoyed the advantages that I had, and awaited cautiously the appro ch of the new comer. I saw him, my eyes being now accustomed to the darkness. saw him slide past the form of Plowitz, who was waiting apparently for a signal, or to get his eyes accustomed to he light. There was a slight click as Hardy reached the lever, which worked the staircase. Had he been warned, then, rather late, and was he on the lookout for me? Did he take Plowitz for an unlicensed intruder? Apparently he did. But Plowitz? At the sound made by Hardy he turned and raised his hand. There was a long dagger in "You are there!" he hissed. Hardy, seeking to secure his prisoner, promptly laid a hand on Plowitz's coliar, and then there was a quick blow, a gurgle, a gasp, a heavy, helpless-sound-

The Color of Bird's Eggs.

Many birds make their nests in lofty trees or on the ledges of precipitous cliffs. Of these, the eagles, vultures and crows are conspicous examples. They are, for the most part, too powerful to be afraid of the marauding magpie, and only fear the attacks of beast of prey, among which they doubtless classify the human race. They rely for the safety of their eggs on the inaccessible positions of the nests. Many of them also belong to a still larger group of birds who rely for the safety of their eggs upon their own ability, either singly, in pairs, or in colonies, to defend them against all aggressors. Few colonies of birds are more interesting than those of herons, cormorants, and their respective allies. These oirds lay white or nearly white eggs. There are so many saint's days in that country that the brakemen and engine drivers have hitherto found it difficult to be pious and attend to their work at the same time. Now, however, this has been rendered possible on the railway aforesaid by the attachment to the train on holy occasions of a saloon carriage fitted up for an altar and wax candles, like a church of the orthodox rite. HOWELL suffered a disastrous fire Saturday night, involving a loss of the class who suffer most from the $80,000, beside the contents of safes the value and condition of which were unknown. The insurance was about $48,-000. The fire started mysteriously in the basement of F. N. Monroe's hardware store, and is believed to have been incendiary. He had received recently the following letter, which is naturally connected with the disaster:

The only fire protection the village had was one chemical engine, and less and innocent classes, which is the more than thirty firms and owners were stronger? burned out, including the postoffice. The net loss would cover the cost of water works for several years.

The large revenue which the cities and counties now derive from the liquor tax will be lost, and an equivalent amount will have to be spread upon the assessment rolls against the farms, houses, factories and shops of Michigan.—Detroit Evening News.

In the event of the adoption of the amendment, the News means; and that is of course true. But the farms, houses, factories and shops of Michigan pay it now, don't they? and pay Mr. Beecher, doubtless with that tire the saloon man about a hundred dollars that follows a pastor's Sunday work. for collecting and paying over to the remained and listened. WHAT DOES EQUITY DEMAND?

A candid and thoughtful man, a farmer in a neighboring town, who does not feel sure whether he ought to vote for or against the prohibition amendment, asks us to discuss in these columns the question of equity raised in the proposed destruction of value invested in brewing and distilling. Is it right, considered apart from what the law might declare to be legal, for the century and says:

We bow reverently before Almighty God, in the intimate sense of an irreparable loss, but yet also with gratitude for the painless close of our brother's life, and in special and heartfelt acknowledgment of manifold blessings which by the Divine grace, through his prolonged work and ministry have been imparted to the cities, the nation and the world.

We therefore lay upon his grave the tribute of our sincere gratitude and affection. We have felt the charm of his affluent and radiant personality. He has had love, fame, popular applause, the support of a most devoted church. He goes on without a break into a realm where genius can unfold all her powers; where the soul can expand to the utmost of its possibilities, and where the man we know can behold the Christ we all love and worship Him as Lord of all. majority of the people to decree the destruction of value already invested in such ways under the sanction of the law? It is creditable to any man to ask such a question as that, and it is fortunate for communities when they have many men who will ask such questions, and who will shape their course by what shall seem to them sufficient answers, even though legal rights might permit a different course.

We do not profess the wisdom to give such answers; but we can perhaps "discuss" the subject, which is what our friend asked. There is no rational doubt about the legal right of the people to prohibit any citizen from employing his property to the public injury; and the people are legally competent to determine what is such employment. Now, if they shall find by experience that a certain employment | attend the evening service in Plymouth which they had permitted is so injur- Church, regretting that he could not ious to the community that the com- attend, and saying, "It is a sign of mon interest demands its suppression, the dawning of the better day for and that suppression would deprive the | which the world has so long yearned property so employed of much value that such a meeting should be possible and thus inflict pecuniary harm to its and that you and yours should so earnowners who had invested their money estly desire the presence of a clergyunder the sanction of laws that the man of that church which seems so people had made, would that be rightremote, and too many would say so would it be just and equitable toward antagonistic to yours. such men? DYSPEPSIA

Up to a few weeks ago I considered myself the champion Dyspeptic of America. During the years that I have been afflicted I have tried almost everything claimed to be a specific for Dyspepsia in the hope of finding something that would afford permanent relief. I had about made up my mind to abandon all medi-Simmons Liver Regulator by a prominent Georgian, a jurist whom I knew, and concluded to try its effects in my case. BIRTHPLACE OF BURNS.

BY ROB'T G. INGERSOLL. [Written on the occasion of Ingersoll's vision the cottage in which Burns was born.]

Though Scotland boasts a thousand names Of patriot, king, and peer, The noblest, grandest of them all, Was loved and cradled here.

Here lived the gentle peasant-prince-The loving cotter-king-Compared with him the greatest lord Is but a titled thing.

'Tis but a cot roofed in with straw, A hovel made of clay; One door shuts out the snow and storm, One window greets the day.

And yet I stand within this room And hold all thrones to scorn, For here, beneath this lowly thatch, Love's sweetest bard was born.

Within this hallowed hut I feel Like one who clasps a shrine, When the glad lips at last have touched The something deemed divine.

As long as day returns,

The tribute of its love and tears

Kansas and Prohibition. Editor YPSILANTIAN: The following communication has just been received-March 7-from Rev. Dr. Cordly of Kansas, in reply to a letter of enquiry I addressed to him a few days since, as to the practical working of prohibition in Kansas. lay it before your readers. M. W. FAIRFIELD. The success of prohibition in Kansas cannot be questioned by any one who candidly looks over the whole ground. Reports to the contrary come from partial and prejudical observation, or the most prominent representative. from men who regard all infringement of the law as equivalent to its entire nullification. There can be no question that the law has largely reduced the amount of drinking, and has lessened the temptation to drinking beyond | Hence it seemed to the authors desiracalculation. We predict a great point gained when we can brand the liquor traffic as an unlawful business. Scores of good citizens who did not originally favor the amendment, do favor the enforcement of law. Almost the entire legal profession are arrayed as friends of enforcing the law. Many who doubted the wisdom of the law and yoted against it, now say, since it is the law of the land it must be enforced. The sentiment in its favor is constantly becoming stronger. Sixty to Eighty Persons Killed and

morning, the 14th inst., was, as usual, full The 7 o'clock train from Dedham.consisting of seven cars and a baggage car, under charge of Conductor Tilden, broke through the bridge. The engine and three cars went over safely, but the four or five others fell through the bridge to the road beneath, a distance of thirty feet. The last car, which was the smoker, turned completely over and struck on top of the others, all being crushed almost out of It is stated that the bridge where the accident occurred is comparatively a new one, and that the accident was caused by a truck on one of the cars giving way, caus ing the car to strike against the abutment of the bridge. The smoking-car, after it fell, caught fire, but the fire department was promptly on hand and prevented any spread of the flames.

Many of the injured were taken to the hospitals in Boston, and some of the killed have not been identified. The train was crowded with working people, and the most intense excitement prevailed among their friends, who were anxious to learn the names of those killed and injured.

The engineer, when his engine broke from the train, kept right on to Forest, Hill and gave the alarm instead of stopping to ascertain the extent of the acci dent, and on that account it was possible to get assistance at once.

Superintendent Folsom says he does not know how many were killed or injured. The bodies of the killed were horribly mangled, in some instances their heads being entirely severed from their bodies, and many of the bodies and crushed beyond recognition. The latest advices from the scene is that twenty-seven of the dead have been identified. There are five or six at the morgue that are almost impossible to Not less than fifty persons were wounded, and many of them will die. Among these are many women. Conductor Tilden was among the killed.

How to get a Free Farm in Dakota The two classes of land open for settlement are government and railroad lands. Nearly all the former, east of the Missouri River, which is first class, is now disposed of. There is, however, plenty of railroad land that can be bought at from two dollars to six dollars per acre, and on five years' time. The variation in price depends upon the quality and location. There are three ways to obtain government land; namely, by the Homestead Law, by pre-emption, and by timber culture Any person over twenty-one years of age, male or female, who is native born, or who, if not, has taken the first steps toward naturalization, may have the benefit of homesteading within six months from the time of entering a homestead claim. The party so doing must put up a house of some sort, which he is willing to live in. He must live on the claim for five years, and pay from four to eight dollars for landoffice fees. But he can get title at once by paying one dollar and twenty-five cents or two dollars and fifty cents per acre. Old soldiers have their time of war service subtracted from this term of residence.

"The Pre-emption Law requires some acts of improvement by the applicant," and filing papers at the cost of two dollars. After this "actual residence, cultivation of the soil, and payment at one dollar and twenty-five cents or two dollars and fifty cents per acre." On this payment you have two years and nine months of time. But title can be had "after six months' residence and cultivation if the payment is then made." The amount of land secured in these cases, as well as by the timber-culture claim, is one-quarter of a section, or one hundred and sixty acres. To obtain a timber claim the fees paid are fourteen dollars. After acres the first year, cultivates it the second year, and plants forest trees, cuttings, or seeds the third year; and beginning the second year breaks another five acres, and cultivates and plants the third and fourth years. After these ten acres of future woodland are started, they must be kept alive for four years more, or eight years from the date of his entry. If at that time he can show six thousand seven hundred and fifty healthy trees, he will be granted title upon paying four dollars land-office fees. By proper management one person can sometimes get land by all these methods, or four hundred and eighty acres in all.—Joel Benton in the Cosmopolitan.

UNSALTED BUTTER.

It is a sound rule, that every thing should go to market as soon as it is ready to ship. This rule applies with particular force to such a perishable article as butter. It can be kept, but it requires some latitude of language to even call such butter sweet. To make it keep longer than thirty days, it must have a liberal allowance of salt to neutralize the effects of the but termilk that cannot always be gotten out. The French and English markets for the highest grades of butter, require that no salt whatever be put in it. The best markets of this country are tending in the same direction. The higher the price paid for the butter, the less salt will be tolerated in it. Such butter is very hard to make, and must be marketed and should be eaten within four or five days from the churn. The compensation for this haste and extra labor is that more of it is consumed. and the price is generally much above that of the highest market quotations. We have heretofore described the process of making "granular butter." 'This is simply butter which is chilled in the churn when it is in the mustard-seed or wheat grain condition, before it has gathered into larger masses. The buttermilk is drawn off and cold water, or even ice water added. Then it is washed with cold water removed from the churn to a barrel orstone jar without mashing the grains and the vessel is then filled up with strong brine. Before shipping, the first brine should be changed, as it will dissolve considerable casein and look turbid, and a econd brine will probably remain clear. While in the brine, the butter must be covered by a circular piece of wood, nearly fitting the barrel, or by a plate if in a stone jar, and weighted so that it will be kept submerged. Such butter will keep for weeks, and when removed from the brine and rinsed well with water, becomes virtually "sweet butter," and is easily worked into rolls or prints to suit the market. If worked without washing out the brine, the the very slight flavor of salt is to our

taste an improvement. THE MUD DISEASE

The season has come when horses will be continually subject to muddy imbs. If not attended to the unsightliness ends in scratches, which often run into grease, sometimes difficult to cure. Many otherwise good farmers seem to be all at sea as to the proper means of preventing the attack, as well as the cure. Common scratches are in close observation among his ounce of salt. After this application of a new enemy. solution of salt and vinegar.

as an alterative, for there is generally more or less liability to blood poisoning in this form of the disease. The cathartic may consist of five drachms aloes and one drachm each of gentian and onginger. Form into a thumb-shaped ball with soap or sirup and administer, thrusting it well back on the tongue. The medicine having operated, give a teaspoonful of powdered saltpetre in the food morning and night for three or four days. Apply a hot poultice once a day to the inflamed parts, sprinkling powdered charcoal over each poultice. Continue until the inflammation is all gone. Then if the parts are washed with tepid water often enough to keep them clean and the following lotion i applied three times a day, the animal should soon be sound. The lotion is composed of one once of sugar of lead dissolved in one pint of water. When applying the lotion give a tablespoonful of epsom salts in the feed once a day, and if proud flesh appears destroy it by applying burnt alum to the parts.

BROOM CORN.

This is a crop that may be nandled with profit in this region with proper attention. A broom-corn grower of experience gives these rules for securing often noticed this winter on the a crop of good material. The ground sparrows should be plowed at least nine inches deep, and ten inches is still better, and the harrow and roller should be used until the soil is as fine as road dust. for it is no use to plant it in clods.

The grower must know himself what hest results. I drill three feet eight inches between rows, and eighteen inches in the row, and leave three to five stocks in a hill. If you want good long corn the cultivating should be the same as field corn, and bear in mind that it must be kept clean. Unless you do, it will do you no good to plant it.

A critical period in the growing is very heavy it should be done when the top is about haif out, and it must have work on. The harvesting part is very particular, for the reason that it must be saved perfectly green, and it must not have any rust on it, if we want to get the best market price. Put it up in the barn-loft and spread it out. Do not put more than three layers on top of each other: if you have room lay them down only just one thick and they will dry sooner. You can prepare it for market at any time, and it will be nice and green.

seem to us very faulty and defective so far as determining with any degree of accuracy this question or presenting results of any practical value. A certain number of cows will be selected for say experiments lasting a month, an accurate account will be kept of the amount and value of all food consumed by them and the quantity of milk produced, and from these data the cost per quart of milk is figured out. But such methods take no account of the fact that cows vary in the amount of milk they give according to the time from last calving, and for a longer or shorter period before calving they go dry, but have to be fed all the same. Now if a number of cows of average quality were selected for experiment which should last a year, or from one calving till the next, and an accurate account kept of the cost of keeping and the amount of milk produced it would furnish data from which the cost to the average dairyman, of producing milk could be determined with sufficient accuracy to be of practical value. In all these experiments it has been assumed that the value of the manure solid and liquid, would pay the cost of attendance and care. But this is simply loose guessing. It may be worth that and may be a great deal more according to locality.

SOWING THE SEED.

When a single grain plant has plenty of room and rich soil it will often tiller so surprisingly as to astonish any one who sees it. We have seen occasional oat plants in corn or barley, where twenty or more stalks, each bearing it panicle of grain, came evidently from a single seed. Farmers who make a practice of sowing a bushel and a half of oats, or one bushel of wheat per acre, get as good crops as those who sow twice as much. other farmers who have sown a larger quantity find their crops diminished when they suddenly reduce it. This suggests the idea that the tendency to tiller in grain ir partly hereditary and seed from grain is which the habit was well established should be much more prolifie than that continually grown from thick seeding. It may be indeed that we shall yet grow seed grain in giving each plant abundance of room, and then sowing the seed thus grown in the usual manner, only a little less heavily per acre. Suppose, for example, that Indian corn had always been grown by broad cast seeding, and that we depended for seed on chance nubbins of ears grown by this method. Would not the plan of growing seed corn in hills be regarded as an immense improvement Who can say that an equal gain is not. to be made in wheat seed by a like change in method of growing.—American Cultivator.

He held up four fingers, shook his head and in other ways tried to warn his friends. But to no purpose. He saw that Vest would break the crowd, so he lit a match and set the straw floor on fire and told them to run for dear life. That cool head which serves him so well now in the great debates of the Senate, and which never lets him become rattled, did not desert him then. With one hand he raked in the boodle, with the other he exhibited his lovely queens, and as he went out of the door with his coat-tail on fire he said: "Let her burn; the pot is mine." An hour or two afterward he sat in the hotel surrounded by a crowd of friends. He told them that the manner in which they weighed hogs in Arkansas was to tie two boxes on the ends of pole and balance it across a rail fence. The hog was placed in one box and the other one was filled with rocks until they balanced. The weight of the hog was ascertained by guessing at the weight of the rocks. Vest then lazily closed his near eye and slowly elevated the brow of the off one, a comical facial expression so peculiar to himself, and remarked that he was of the opinion that some people in that town knew as little about playing poker as the peo-ple of Arkansas did about weighing nogs. A WonderfulClock.

The renowned horologist of Villingin in the Black Forest, Christian Martin, has just completed a clock, which, as a marvel of construction, probably sur passes all that has hitherto been achieved in the clock making art. The clock is three and a half meters high, two and three quarters broad, and set in a magnificent Gothic case. It shows the seconds, minutes, quarter hours, hours, days, weeks, months, the four seasons of the year, the years, and leap years until the last second of the year successive phases of the moon; and it

Cure for Rheumatism.

That electric well or pit in Taliaferro County, Georgia, continues to cure severe cases of chronic rheumatism. The The well is located on the side of a smal mountain four miles from the Sharon Station, on the Georgia Railroad. It was dug last summer in search for gold. It is six or eight feet square and about fourteen feet deep, the bottom being covered over with loose boards and a rude carget. Four chairs are at the bottom for persons to sit in. The owner has built a small house over the well. There is nothing like a shock, only a tingling sensation like that caused by a very weak current from a galvanie battery. The sensation is felt whether one touches the walls or not.

The Sacramental Sabbath, whether it comes in an American church or an English chapel, or a Scotch kirk, is more impressive than any other Sabbath. Its light is holier, calmer, sweeter; its voices more tender; its touch is softer; its memories are more chastened. The fruit: of the Christian life suddenly ripen, like orchards on the hill fronting the south. The wine of the Hely Sacrament seems pressed from the grapes of celestial vineyards, and the bread broken seems to drop from the hand of him who parted the loaves for the 5,000. We walk to the Church of God with more thoughtful face and with quieter step. The jubilant songs of other Sundays are struck through with pensiveness, and are all a tremble with tears; and when, at the close of the service, at the door we shake hands, it is with a more cordial grasp, because we feel thrilling through our body and mind and soul the great doctrines of Christian brother-hood; and our minds go back to our forefathers celebrating the sacrament in times of persecution in Scotland among the Highlands; commemorating the dying love of Christ while they were pursued of their enemies, pouring the wine into rough wooden cups, dipping the waters of baptism from the mountain rock, until one day they heard the voices of their enemies coming up the hill, and the pastor cried out:

We see one dying accursed for our sin, and we hear him in his dying words begging for our service, and vet how little service we have rendered. Of this short life we have begrudged God even a fragment. Alas! Alas! Some of us have lived out the most of our days, and yet we have rendered to God no earnest service. The Opsilantian.

The republican convention for this judicial circuit, held at Dundee last Thursday, unanimously nominated E. D. Kinne, of Ann Arbor, for Circuit Judge, and appointed a committee of tive to sit on him and hold him on the track. That is the kind of a candidate the people want-a min who has to be held on the track, rather than one who cannot be kept off by all the precautions they are able to take. It is an ideal case of the office seeking the man in spite of himself, and the convention refused to listen for a moment to Mr. Kinne's positive protestations. The committee referred to is also to serve as the republican district committee for the ensuing six years, and is composed of J. F. Lawrence and A. W. Hamilton of Ann Arbor, Wm. M. Osband of Ypsilanti, H. A. Lockwood and O. A. Critchett of Monroe.

Here's another ticket for Michigan. The union labor party held a convention at Lansing, Tuesday, and nominated for short term Justice O'Brien, J. Atkinson, and John C. Blanchard for the long term; and W. H. Millar of Otsego and W. G. Baumgarden of Manistee, for Regents. All but the last are on the greenback ticket. This district was unrepresented in the convention, but was given a place on the central committee, with John O. Zable of Monroe.

Rev. Thomas Holmes, editor and publisher of the Chelsea Herald, refers to the fact that his paper is not half supported by the citizens of Chelsea, and says that it will take but a few more weeks of such treatment to close up his office. The Herald is a good, clean, reliable paper, and as such deserves the cordial support of the town in which it is published. Chelsea cannot afford to have it discontinued or to have its management changed.

The Detroit papers are evidently determined to thoroughly cure their readers of the base ball mania and make even a mention of the game provokative of disgust and odium. They give columns of silly, nonsensical stuff in relation to the players, suitable, perhaps, for saloon gossip or discussion by semi-idiotic dudes, but which is certainly not worthy of place in respectable newspapers.

Outgrown at Both Ends. (Detroit Journal)

If the report of the Normal school committees can avail, that institution will no longer be kept, as the committee now say it is, in the condition of the boy who had outgrown his clothes at both ends. Sixty thousand dollars is asked for a new building and $10,000 for the library. The committee has figured that while at the university there are 43 books for each student, at the normal school there are but 12. It should be an encouragement to the legislature to increase the school's library fund, because not only of the excellent foundation already laid, but also of the systematic management and effective workings of the book resources already at the command of the scholars.

"Glimpses," is the title of a neatly printed and tastefully bound volume by Mr. G. C. Smithe, of THE YPSILAN-TIAN. It is a series of brief sketches of scenes, places, and experiences, during and since the war, within the observation of the author. These 'glimpses" are graphically written, and present their subjects clearly to the reader. Mr. Smithe's style is very neat and perspicuous, and no one can fail to read the book with pleasure. The book is not published for fame or profit so much as to place its matter in a form more permanent than the files of a newspaper, and leave a pleasant memento of the author among personal friends and patrons. A small edition only has been published, and copies may be had at 80 cents each.

> Correspondence at Its Best. Detroit Free Press.

"Glimpses of Places and People and Things," is the title of a modest but attractive little volume which bears upon its title page the name of Geo. C. Smithe, of THE YPSILANTIAN. It is made up almost exclusively of letters written during the war and since, to the Cazenovia Republican, the Cambridge (Ill.) Chronicle, and other papers; and while they have all the sketchiness which is the invariable characteristic of newspaper correspondence, they have also the crispness and attractiveness which belong to such correspondence at its best.

A Bouquet of Gems. Jackson (Ohio) Standard

One of the prettiest little books ever issued is "Glimpses," published by THE YPSILANTIAN, at Ypsilanti, Michigan. The work is made up of gems in the way of correspondence, notes of travel, poetry, and journalistic work generally. It is as entertaining in matter as it is artistic in appearance, and would be a neat addition to any library. It is a bouquet of gems.

> From First to Last a Credit. Kewanee (Illinois) Courier.

We have received from Mr. Geo. C Smithe, of Ypsilanti, Mich., formerly well known all over this county as editor of the Cambridge Chronicle, a neatly bound volume entitled "Glimpses of tion Places and People and Things," of which the veteran editor is the author. The book is made up of pleasantly written letters which have been previously published in various newspapers | in the dyke for the new bridge for six cents per yard? Echo answers, where? from 1861 to 1886. In subjects it is varied, extending from his army experiences, and life at the capital, to adventures in the Rocky Mountains and upon the western prairies in early days. A few choice poems close the book, which is from first to last a credit to its author. It is published by THE YPSI-LANTIAN press, and is a specimen of most excellent book making.
